What is dietary supplement?

A dietary supplement, also known as food supplement or nutritional supplement, is intended to complement a diet and provide nutrients, such as vitamins, minerals, fibre, fatty acids and amino acids that may be missing or not consumed in sufficient quality in a person's diet. Some countries define dietary supplements as food, while in others they are defined as drugs or natural health products.

You Really Do Need Them? Here's Why

The problem with most people is that they base their health on how they feel. Just because you feel healthy and are in perfect shape, does not mean you do not need supplements.

When it suddenly strikes – an illness, a health problem, as sign of old age, weakness – we begin to search for a dietary or herbal supplement to help us get out of the hole we have unfortunately dug for ourselves. So, without further ado, the answer to this question is; yes, you do need nutritional supplements.

Nutritional deficiency is almost impossible to avoid in these modern times. With our busy lifestyle, the ever-tempting convenience of fast food, it is now very difficult to maintain a healthy and balanced daily diet.

This is to say, though, that health supplements should replace proper nutrition. Besides, nutritional supplements are still supplements. They work complementing your diet to make sure you get the right nutrients that your body need.

If your lifestyle and work conditions prevent you from having a nutritious diet, then taking a good dietary supplement is a must.

Ultimately supplements help you overcome nutritional deficiencies. We need all the nutrients in their proper amounts for optimum health. Since our diets most likely can not provide all of them, nutritional supplements would fill in those gaps.

There are much more benefits to nutritional supplements. The main advantage is that these supplements help you have the optimum health you desire and minimize the risk of disease.
